Concepts of Homoeopathy

Homoeopathy today is a steadily growing system and is being practiced across all over the world. In India it has become a household name and the variety of its pills and syrups are of the best. A large study done in 2000, 80% of the Indian population agree depend Homoeopathy for their health care needs and is considered as the fastest rising popular system of medicine in the Country.

It is more than a century and a half now that Homoeopathy is being practiced in India. It has blended so well into the roots and traditions of the country that it has been recognized as one of the National Systems of Medicine and plays a very important role in providing health care to a large number of people. Its strength lies in its evident effectiveness as it takes a holistic approach towards the sick individual through provision of inner balance at mental, emotional, spiritual and physical levels.

The word 'Homoeopathy' is derived from two Greek words, Homoeos meaning similar and pathos meaning suffering. Homoeopathy simply means treating diseases with remedies, prescribed in minute doses, which are capable of producing symptoms similar to the disorder when taken by healthy people. It is based on the natural law of healing, "Similia Similibus Curantur" which means "like are cured by like". It was given a scientific basis by Dr. Samuel Hahnemann (1755-1842) in the early 19th century. It has been serving humanity for over two centuries and has withstood the ravages of time and has emerged as a time tested therapy. For the scientific principles propounded by Hahnemann are natural and well proven and continue to be followed with success even today.
